

WHALE WATCHING TOURS

WHALE WATCHING SEASON HAPPENS FROM DECEMBER 15TH TO APRIL 15TH

Each year in early autumn, one of nature's most delightful signs of seasonal change occurs—the migration of hundreds of whales from the frigid waters of the Arctic to the warm, calm waters surrounding the Baja Peninsula. And, from December to April, there is no better place to view such a spectacle than Los Cabos.

The whales make their way south completing the 19,312-km (12,000-mile) migration by late December, staying until April when they repeat their journey northward. Ideal climate, shallow waters, salinity and abundant marine life make the bays and lagoons north of Los Cabos the perfect place for whales to birth and rear their young. Of the 11 species of whales found worldwide, eight venture to the waters off Los Cabos, including minke, bryde, fin, sei, humpback, gray and blue. This six-month, round-trip sojourn is the longest trip made by any animal in the world.
